

MAKULUMANE WEEKEND 9 – 11 DECEMBER 2010

Mary Clover

Nine intrepid travelers braved the rough roads to Makulumane on Friday afternoon: Keith and Margaret, Mark and Mary, Chris with Margaret Kirsten and Margaret Roberts, and Jill and Tony. Because of the recent heavy rains the clay roads were rutted and slippery, but we all made it eventually, and settled in comfortably for an evening in front of the fire.

Setting out on Saturday morning:

The drizzle soon dried out and left us with perfect clear walking weather, interspersed with showers of rain.

Walking along the contour path.

The lovely, luminescent, berg, laid out before us in all its magnificent splendour, luxuriating in the warm sunshine after several days of heavy rain.

Short break for tea.

LEFT:
The winding path up towards Nandi's Falls.

Below Nandi's Falls

Nandi's Falls

Keith (and his thumb), Tony, Margaret and Mark behind the falls.

Out with the rain gear!

We had to hurry to cross the stream again before the water rose too high.

Sheltering from the rain under a big rock, which sneakily directed little runnels of water down the backs of our necks!

Margaret and Keith

Tony, Jill and Margaret.

Almost home, and almost dry.

The long, wet, winding road home.